T-Mobile Expands LTE Coverage with New Mobile Hotspots T-Mobile introduced new mobile hotspots today that work with both GSM and CDMA networks. The new mobile hotspots are capable of supplying a MiFi-like coverage for up to eight devices at one time, according to T-Mobile. There's no mention of calling or text out, but it's possible the hotspots could double as a port-connected Wi-Fi device. The hotspots include 2,000 MB of data, which apparently don't count against T-Mobile data allotment. They also include a Bluetooth and WiFi 2.4 GHz access point, and T-Mobile will throw in a free month of service. Like T-Mobile's existing MiFi service, the new hotspots are a bit of a hassle to use, requiring the user to download the Wi-Fi app and a series of tools to connect them to a T-Mobile phone account. Still, it's a better alternative to using a standard router. T-Mobile will start offering the new hotspots for free in the near future, but don't get your hopes up that the service will be a permanent fixture. I imagine T-Mobile will eventually tie it into more of its other offerings, and charge for it at some point. But now that T-Mobile has demonstrated that it can provide Wi-Fi access for a large number of users with a set of inexpensive devices, we can probably expect to see more of this type of device in the future. Cushion decorating ideas come in many different shapes and sizes, but the key is to choose the right chair cushion, and the right color. You will be able to re-design your living space into an up-to-date and comfortable place where you will find yourself every single time you enter. 1. Don't buy chair cushions that are too bulky or heavy. Some consumers think buying simple cushions are best, because they're less expensive. The fact is, chair cushions can actually be created with lots of different fabrics in a variety of designs, but choosing a simple, cheap, or smaller cushion might not produce the outcome you want.
