: Undoing the 'Housing Legacy' of Slum Clearance, by John Burnett By John Burnett The British Leningrad In February 1945, Soviet soldiers had the joyous task of issuing occupation pay to thousands of British military deserters. This generous gesture was designed to encourage the repatriation of as many as possible of the 8,000 East Enders who had fled home to the aerodrome areas of the Fens in the second world war. Although the Soviets had allied themselves with the British, solidarity was not at its fullest pitch, especially after the secret Anglo-Soviet negotiations broke down in October 1943. Some of this temporary friction stemmed from the fact the wartime alliance was crucial for Britain. Without Soviet assistance, Britain would have had to build up its own army to fight the Nazis. Stalin in turn realised that Britain was a valuable conduit of supplies to the Soviet people and a useful balance-weight against the USA. The British had to spend three years negotiating with the Soviet ambassador Iosif Grigurts to repay advances with the loan of Anglo-Soviet Military Industries (ASMI), men and goods captured from the Germans. These negotiations were marred, however, with some Soviet officials claiming the British were being more unfriendly than during the Stalinist terror. In one instance, the Soviet chief economic adviser, planning adviser to Roosevelt's chair, Alexander Bubanine, stood on the Brooklyn Bridge in July 1944 and castigated 'fugitives from the slave labour camps in England and America'. In some senses, Soviet attitudes towards the illegal exodus of Third Reich refugees helped to provide a foundation for the disturbances in the late 1970s. Now in power, the Soviet Union became far more unsympathetic. Bubanine was an interesting figure – and relevant in an East End context. He had been born Alexandru Bubaninade in a well-to-do family in Bessarabia, then part of the Russian empire. Seeking a positive impact on the lives of the peasants and workers of his native country, Bubanine became a university lecturer and then a member of the Communist Party of Romania in 1920. He soon built a reputation as an organisational expert, gaining an appointment as the Communist Party chief in the new Soviet republic of Moldova. After the USSR's successful incorporation of Moldova in the early 1930s, Bubanine was back in Moscow overseeing the first wave of engineers drafted from the occupied Soviet Union to restore

In Team Fortress 2, you are Captain Mann and Captain McCree. Your teams are comprised of Soldier, Heavy, Scout and Pyro. Each class has its own unique weapon, ability, and play style. The positions you choose at the start of the game will determine which role you'll play on your team. The infantry classes represent the heavy heart of the battle – they are the generals, the mechanics of warfare. Their broad strokes of weapons and aim will decide the pace and scale of the battle. The Pyro is a powerful flame thrower that acts as the ultimate general on the battlefield. His aim is to hold and position the front lines, keep his teammates supplied with rockets, and maintain the constant battle for the lifeline of the base. The Scout is the eyes and ears of the team, the sniper who can quickly score from a distance. Your aim is to anticipate where the enemy will appear, and attack before they're at the perfect place. Your role as the sniper is most critical because you control the angles and distances, you have to see the game before it happens and decide where to take aim. courses. A complete remission was seen in 26 patients and a partial remission in 8 patients. The complete remission rate was 66.7% in the patients with carcinoma in situ and 71.4% in the patients with T1 carcinoma. The mean survival time was 18 months, and the median survival time was 10.5 months. Side effects of the treatment were leukopenia in 46% and asthenia in 25% of the patients. The most frequent gastrointestinal side effect was nausea, vomiting and diarrhea. Hematuria was seen in three patients. One patient died from septicemia during the treatment. The most frequent type of recurrence was local, and two patients developed metastatic disease. The results of this study confirm the value of epirubicin in the treatment of stage B or C patients with noninvasive carcinoma of the bladder.A single-mode optical fiber has at an outermost diameter thereof a small portion called a hyperbolic region, in which a core of the
