Exploring practice for supporting people with diabetes: issues that trigger disempowerment. To explore the reasons why people with diabetes are disempowered and how the practice of supporting them can contribute to a reduction in the problem. The design of the study was based on the perspective of a critical realist. Its design included stakeholder interviews with therapists who work with people with diabetes, to explore the meaning of 'practice'. A qualitative design. The design included 13 focus groups held with 59 people with diabetes in two boroughs in south-west England, who had participated in previous research and who had either an insulin pump or who used an insulin pump and meal preparation software. In the report of the study in the International Journal of Diabetes Management, we discussed how a practice approach provided the basis for an in-depth exploration of the subject matter. Four types of practice supported by the research were the following: direct practice, therapeutic practice, administering practice and political practice. We named this new approach 'empowerment practice', which was defined as participation in behaviour that was a manifestation of one's own beliefs and expectations. The practice of empowering people with diabetes shifted from a focus on control to a focus on self-management. People with diabetes were empowered by doing things for themselves rather than by being involved in activities that they were not allowed to do. We concluded that several types of practice trigger disempowerment, rather than empowerment in people with diabetes. Because empowerment focuses on personal behaviour rather than on other people, it holds great promise for the future of health care.Q: Get parent property from Child List element in Entity Framework I have a Parent Class and a Child class, The Parent has a property which is List of the Child class. I can access the data, but what is the best way to access the parent class(Which is of type IProduct) I was thinking of below approaches Approach 1: Using an intermediate class and then assign it to the actual Parent Class object. Is this approach correct or should I consider other approach? Approach 2: Group By Parent class and then get the Parent class's property value from those with same
