I haven't ever seen an old app before so I'm unsure as to whether things are written right or left. I've searched and found a few old links but they don't seem to address how complete the relation is. I would make a comment for each below for brevity. Sample app in question has models followed by associated controllers and I have the '...' for a comment on the topics_controller file .... has the fk for an individual following that gets the association in the user.rb file in my notes_controller Both lose a lot of functionality and leave me with an object that isn't very useful to show on the frontend. user.rb has the user id fk which is needed for creating posts and the $user_id scope in notes_controller models user.rb has_many :followed_topics, foreign_key: "followed_by" notes_controller has_many :people_notes, :as => :people, :foreign_key => :people_id has_many

:topics, foreign_key: "topic", class_name: "Topic" user.rb has_many :people, through: :followed_topics, source: :person models user.rb has_many :notes, foreign_key: "person_id", dependent: :destroy, class_name: "Note" notes_controller has_many :people_notes, :as => :people, :foreign_key => 'user_id' Would it be better

Recent studies have linked autophagy to the pathogenesis of several human diseases, including cancer, neurodegenerative diseases and cardiovascular diseases. The function of autophagy in mammals is regulated by a central autophagy protein, ATG5. The aim of this proposal is to investigate the function of ATG5 and its modulators in response to various types of cellular stresses in vivo. Pitavastatin (PT) is a hydrophobic 3-pyridyl-1-isopropyl-2(R)-cyclopropyl-1,2-dihydroxyhept-4-en-3-one that is widely used for the treatment of hypercholesterolemia.

However, recent evidence suggests that the association between PT and anticancer agents may enhance the efficacy of chemotherapy. We previously demonstrated that PT ameliorated sorafenib-induced cardiomyopathy in mouse models by upregulating autophagy via the mTOR signaling pathway. However, little is known about the underlying mechanisms. The aim of the present study was to evaluate the protective effect of PT against sorafenib-induced cardiomyopathy in rats and to determine the underlying molecular mechanisms. Rats were divided into three groups as follows: the sham group, the sham + PT group, and the sorafenib group (24 weeks after operation). On the 4th week of PT administration, PT
