This is the initial version of the Apache setup on the arachne board. The last few days, I've been working on tuning the jave version for the latest Httpd releases, which involves the design of the communication with the arachne board. This is one of the first boards that supports JAVA. The current configuration file specifies that the HTTP server is on port 8088, that it listens on all IP interfaces and that it supports the TCP_NODELAY socket option. This means that the client will not have to wait for a roundtrip to the server before receive a response. That's it, this is the current configuration. You may download the current version of the Apache httpd server from The file has been uploaded on SourceForge, in the Subversion Repository, under the name: `svn://javassever.googlecode.com/svn/trunk/httpd-a1` The previous version of the Apache httpd file was not working, so I started a clean copy of httpd from the current Release Version and made some modifications so that it is capable of working with the arachne board. Still pending to have the documentation up and ready. The arachne board is a small embedded platform for software experimentation with an arachne processor
