I love how he used heroin rather than crack or coke. We might see more of this from the Economist. He gets around. Now for the animation. It's easy to imagine Chekhov doing this kind of thing, always looking for a way of wryly exploring the old vs. the new, whether the theme is technology vs. the ancient past, or looking at the relationship between children and adults, or any other theme that could be explored in a fairytale where adults are always out of their depth, despite their wealth of expertise. In the story, the adults start out as being out of their depth. One of the adults is the pretty step-sister of the prince/princess, and her dance at the grand
