We are delighted to announce that from the 2013-2014 Season, the Australian Football League is introducing an innovative scouting program – the League's first ever 'three-year player' development plan – to improve the way that players prepare for the NFL, and to further develop the position of the AFL as a global sport. This new plan will seek to scout, develop and market in alignment with the on-field requirements of the modern sport and to ensure future success. The plan will operate alongside the three-year draft, including a 21-week training program, specific development and marketing plans, and a player exchange program that we are excited to announce will begin in July. The plan will be aligned to the priority development of the position of the AFL as a global sport. The AFL's strategic priorities for the sport include: • maximising the financial and commercial benefits of the game from both a club and player perspective • establishing the position of the AFL as a global sport • securing the long-term financial sustainability of the game • enabling the international exposure of the game • implementing our own infrastructure and governance structure • delivering a world-class league playing surface • enhancing fan engagement and participation. "While we have some of the world's greatest footballers in the sport, we need to ensure they are competing in the most prepared environment in the world, and our innovative process is designed to ensure we do this." The League's experience in developing players in the US will allow us to discover and identify the talented young people in the AFL and beyond who have the potential to succeed as elite footballers in the sport. "We want to work with the clubs in order to identify the best players who fit our plans and we have developed a process to

A vast majority of the world's Islamic nations have renounced Sharia law, including Iran, according to a new report. The Pew Research Center found 92 percent of Muslim-majority countries rejected Sharia law. "This is a seismic shift from just a decade ago," the study reported, quoting Pew's Fahad Nazer, head of research at the Center. There are only three Islamic countries that enforce Sharia law. They are Iraq, Afghanistan and Sudan. The Pew report found the countries where Sharia law was enforced included nine countries in the Middle East, North Africa and South Asia, including Afghanistan, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Mauritania, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Somalia and Sudan. Many Islamic nations, including those in the Gulf states and North Africa, don't enforce any official version of Sharia law. Instead, Sharia is used in a flexible and personalized manner. In April, Britain's Daily Mail found 91 percent of British Muslims believe Sharia law should be used as the primary source of law in the nation. The survey was conducted in the United States and 31 other Western democracies between June and December 2013. "We found that
