I'm trying to figure out if there is a jQuery plugin out there to make working with tables better in IE6 and up, as compared to classic HTML and just-plain-table.js. For example, current development environment does not include a IE6 beta version, and that's really killing me at the moment. Does anyone know of such a plugin, or know some reason why such a plugin may not exist? A: If you use jQuery UI version 1.4.1 (the current version as I write this), you get "grid" for IE6 and up out of the box: It takes care of a lot of browser specific issues and is designed to be used in a relatively complex UI. There are a couple of addons to get the look and feel of table manipulation in an IE6 tab, such as: A: This is how I recommend going about things with IE6: EDIT: The below is what my last screen shot looks like when I click the "Go IE6" button. The green text is the title of the current
