The ultimate goal of this project is to develop a new strategy to treat kidney disease, and perhaps prevent it, by targeting transcription factors. Kidney disease afflicts millions of people in the United States and worldwide. Traditional drug development has been slow, and most treatment modalities are cumbersome. This project takes a novel approach, which can accomplish the following: 1) target the root cause of kidney disease, namely genetic mutation; 2) screen for small molecules to treat kidney disease; and 3) dramatically reduce the need for animal models. This project relies on our recent discovery that transcription factors are mutated in many forms of kidney disease. We hypothesize that transcription factors will be essential to kidney development; however, they can also cause kidney disease. We also hypothesize that transcription factors provide excellent drug targets. We further hypothesize that: 1) transcription factor mutations that cause kidney disease are readily identified, based on their effect on kidney development
