Completely FREE to read and..Two cases of spinal intramedullary nocardial abscess treated with non-invasive management. The authors report two cases of intramedullary spinal nocardial abscesses in immunocompetent patients. Complete myelography and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) of the spine combined with spinal fluid (SF) analysis were performed at an early stage to determine the diagnosis. The myelograms revealed characteristic radiological features: a T-sign and a dumbbell configuration. The corresponding MRI showed inflammatory changes. These indicated the abscess located in the conus medullaris and the cauda equina. Surgical drainage was performed because the tumour involved these structures. However, the histological and bacteriological examinations of the specimens obtained during surgery revealed the presence of a nocardial infection, without any other bacterial infection. The patients were treated with a combination of antibacterial agents and non-invasive management. Their symptoms disappeared without any surgical intervention. The clinical course in both patients was
