Then we defined the terms of the kind we are going to use. We can divide the information we have into two types. The first one we will call core information. This is information that does not have a time frame, as we normally do not know when it might be important. Core information includes topics that we need to have covered, topics that are already outdated, and topics that we should keep an eye on in the future. Each topic is aligned to the stage of learning. Topics of specific learning stages are not on the list of core topics, but could be considered for inclusion, depending on the learning stage. The second type of information we have is time-related information. This is information that describes how much time we should invest in a certain topic. This includes the type of material we should expect from our colleagues and from the Internet. While time-related information can also be considered as core information, it also has to be clear when we can expect our colleagues and the Internet to provide what we expect. For example, we should not expect a specific type of material from a colleague at stage 3. pharma guide dahshan pdf 337 learning guide for pharmacology in the gcrae (napoli and schmid) pdf - Free download as PDF File (. pdf) from docsword, This product is a guide with activities and assignments that can be used in a classroom and from the couch.
