The purpose of the organisation is to support South Australia's manufacturing industry. History The South Australian Manufacturing Institute was established on 1 October 1997 as an independent government agency to encourage growth and technological development in South Australia's manufacturing sector. Through its programs, industry can apply for grants and incentives, and access a range of government services and services from the private sector. In April 2015, the organisation was renamed the South Australian Manufacturing Institute. In June 2014, the Minister for Trade and Investment, Stephen Mullighan, announced the South Australian Government would establish an Industry Development Board to advise, guide and support industry. The organization will be based at the South Australian Manufacturing Institute and will draw on the expertise of the South Australian Business Council to advise the Government on various issues related to growth and expansion. Programs The South Australian Government announced it would establish an Industry Development Board to advise, guide and support industry. The organization will be based at the South Australian Manufacturing Institute runs six programs for support, one of which is a program for Innovative Small and Medium Sized Enterprises (ISMES) which has proven to be beneficial to the local manufacturing sector. Innovative Small and Medium Sized Enterprises Program The Innovative Small and Medium Sized Enterprises Program (ISMES) is designed to increase the number and the scale of small and medium sized businesses in South Australia. The program currently provides funding to up to fifty small and medium sized manufacturing businesses. The program is run by the South Australian Manufacturing Institute and the South Australian Business Council in partnership with the State Bank of South Australia and funds are only available for South Australian businesses. Funding of up to $150,000 is available for the first round. In June 2017, the government announced that the program would be renamed to the Competitive Manufacturing and Innovation Program. Innovative Small and Medium Sized Enterprises Fund In 2016, the state government launched the Innovative Small and Medium Sized Enterprises Fund to provide funding of up to $2.4 million to small and medium sized South Australian manufacturing businesses.
