Field of the Invention The present invention is related to a latch mechanism, and more particularly, to a latch mechanism used to release the lid of a storage container. 2. Description of the Prior Art With the fast progress of modern technology, storage containers, such as beverage cans, bottles, tins or beverage boxes, are generally used to contain a beverage, and in particular are also used to store wine, beer or other fermented or non-fermented drinks. Thus, how to keep the beverage stored in the storage container in a good condition has become an important issue, and a latch mechanism is developed to be used to lock and release the lid of the storage container. U.S. Pat. No. 4,789,198 discloses a prior art latch mechanism, which includes a latch element, a supporting body and a locking element. The latch element is movable in an inner side of the supporting body, and includes an elastic hook that has a hook portion for connecting to a guide portion. The supporting body includes a hub, which has a receiving portion and a tube extending from a circumference of the receiving portion. The locking element is movably mounted in the tube of the supporting body, and is coupled to a spring element to allow the locking element to be pushed by a predetermined force, thereby enabling the latch element to push the locking element to move in the tube of the supporting body. As a result, the hook portion of the latch element is not allowed to pivot, so as to allow the lid of the storage container to be locked or released. However, in order to allow the locking element to be released, the pushing force applied to the locking element needs to be lower than 6d1f23a050
