A 3D model is the final product that engineers use to design bridges, so the way that it is designed, would determine its performance and strength. It is easy to test how a bridge would react to a structure in an engineering testing office. It is not easy to test the actual forces that act upon a bridge, since there is no way of knowing the exact forces that would act on the bridge. Engineers make use of simulations to make certain that a bridge would not give way under any circumstances.
