The same thing happens in RA2, but your Red Alert 2.exe is modified to run in borderless windowed mode when using the -win parameter, essentially meaning that if you put your maximum screen resolution in RA2.ini, it will seemingly look like fullscreen. YR doesn't have this, could you incorporate that as well BTW, some other differences between your RA2 and YR installers is that YR doesn't include the music or the standard.exes (fixed by this compatibility solution). having the name, the player is immediately told to capture the white house, also known as the hq, or headquarters. there you will need to construct a ptr (power transmission room), a 4-story building that acts as an energy source and weapons factory, and a defensive turret, which will act as a mobile war machine and protect you from enemy strikes. of the three, the ptr is the most important and best-protected building in the game. once you have your hq built and captured, you can conquer the other six cities. each one holds two important resources: power core and teleport, which both are vital to your strategic attack. both resources are independent of each other. when you get a power core, you can use it to produce units and build new bases (also known as outposts). when you capture a teleport resource, you can teleport your unit to it from any base. once the player captures all the cities, they will be able to produce new weapons and technologies on a new level. this is done by building a factory of the matching weaponry, which can be any kind of weapon from scattershot rifles, tank cannon, and anti-air guns. once you have a factory built, you can choose to produce any special technology and unit that match the corresponding weapon type. there are four weapon types: heavy weapons, light weapons, vehicles, and psychic weapons. most of the special units are assigned to a specific weapon type. for instance, finka and boba fett work for light weapons. cryoanetics and kamov works for the psychic weapon. 5ec8ef588b
