While Google Translate is probably one of the most used tools among software engineers and digital specialists these days, it is still a bit of a mystery for new users. And, although Google Translate can be used for a wide variety of purposes, it still requires a fair bit of effort to get started. Some users claim that using Google Translate is a lot like conversing with an emoji. Well, let's dive in and find out what kind of user experience you will get by using Google Translate in a simple way. Lets Start There are many Google Translate options. For example, you can make use of the tools located in the lower left corner of the Google search box, or you can follow the links on the search results page directly. For this article, we will be using the links in the search results page. These links usually direct you to a version of the Google Translate website. As it is a website, if you visit it in your browser you will see a text field to enter the text you want to translate. Type your text, choose the destination language and click the 'Translate' button. A new Google Translate window will open, where the results appear in the language you chose. And that's it. It is pretty straight forward. And for every page that you visit, you can customize Google Translate to your liking. So, while this is a short tutorial on how to use Google Translate, I hope you learned a thing or two. In the next article, I will be sharing with you more ways you can use Google Translate with a single click. Until then, I hope you enjoyed the video and see you
