So, what's new? Well, one of the best improvements is the startup time of Photoshop. This was a performance enhancement introduced in CC2014, and here's a shot of how slow the old version was. Expect more people streaming from Premiere to Photoshop, but it will take a few quarters of experience to get comfortable. We're also adding shared comments, which allows you to invite users to leave feedback right in a photo. You can choose what fields to make them fill out (we'll add tags to collections soon), or if you just want a quick response, you can let them review with a single comment. Adobe Photoshop now recognizes shared comments in Shared Linked Comments, making it far easier to collaborate with other people in Lightroom. In both Lightroom 4 and Lightroom 5, the Comments pane, as a whole, is better organized. I really like the new typeface, and while I'd like to see some more customization in the comments, Basic will suffice for now. Note that link above says Lightroom Shared. They're in a special place in the menu called Creative Cloud. As long as you've chosen the option to access Creative Cloud things when opening Lightroom 5, you can't miss it. Also, as in the earlier version of Lightroom, it remains possible to show an undeleted negative and a split-toned image side by side (in fact, it becomes advantageous to do so). The new Live Photo tool is a big win for Lightroom. It's also a contender to replace Lightroom's "Find in Catalog" function, another big win. When you're working on a large library of photos, the speed in which you can narrow down the number of photos you need can be important.

The new Photoshop can visualize the raw data of a production pipeline so designers and their collaborators can see what's going on across the board without leaving Photoshop. With Share for Review, people can view workspaces and data even while they're working offline, and collaborate in real-time on any projects across any surfaces. Share for Review gives people on the collaborative team the ability to view the project, without relying on a live connection. This removes the need to synchronize two or more instances of the app to ensure everyone is on the same page and that any changes to Photoshop have not been lost.
