Q: react hooks or redux? which of them is best for use? I'm trying to decide between using `useReducer()` or `useState()` with Redux. When I started learning about React I used the first one. I found out that in `useReducer()` the state is defined as an argument passed to it, which means that you cannot inject any other functional state data that you get from an event. So what is the best solution to use to store data that can change based on different props. The Redux approach is to let components change the state itself. Any tips and suggestions will be appreciated!

A: From Redux's documentation (emphasis mine): What is Redux? Redux uses a special data structure, called a state tree, to manage the application's data. A Redux state tree is a tree-like data structure of states that represents the entire state of the app. It is optimized to allow you to fetch the current state in one action. So you should always use hooks inside components, because they are optimized to render only the presentational/data, and no logic. The present invention relates to a method for the manufacture of ternosilicate glass fibers from low-alkali basic salt or salt-containing molten glass, having a minimum content of alkali metal oxide. Terronasilicate glass fibers are formed by fiberizing a very fine-structure glass melt containing, among other things, sodium oxide and alkaline-earth metal oxides. The glass fibers are drawn from the melt by means of a fibreizing nozzle and received on a moving conveyor. This conveyor is cooled, preferably to a temperature of at least 20.degree. C. below the softening point of the fiberizing melt. By this means, the fibers are stretched to increase their tensile strength, and thus have a long service life in an abrasive environment. In addition to the alkali metal oxide, the basic salt content should be kept as low as possible in the basic salt or salt-containing glass melt because otherwise, due to the prevailing open structure of the fiberizing nozzle, it is disadvantageous that the melt will evaporate during fiberization so that the fibers are drawn irregularly at the
